

Field of Study Proposal Form

The field of study option is open to Extension School ALB degree candidates who wish to concentrate their undergraduate studies in a specific field (e.g., biology, government, or religion) within their chosen area of concentration (sciences, social sciences, or humanities). To be eligible, candidates must have completed at least two Harvard courses in the proposed field with honors grades. Only courses taken at Harvard count toward the field of study; transfer courses are not applicable.

Ideal candidates for this option are students who have completed two or three courses in a particular subject at Harvard that sparked their interest to learn more, and who are considering a graduate degree or career in the field. In addition, candidates who want their undergraduate degree to focus on a specific area of interest can benefit from the organization and academic advice, including a Faculty Advisor, that a field of study offers.

Fields of study are individually designed for students. Each semester, students receive advising on the courses that will count toward their fields, given their unique backgrounds, interests, and future plans. Students can also search for courses that apply to each field of study through the degree course search, available online at Courses. Completing a field of study will not change the degree earned; it will not appear on the diploma, but it will appear on a candidate's official transcript for graduate school admission committees or prospective employers to review.

Candidates may do only one field of study. They must complete a minimum of 32 credits in their field at Harvard with B- or higher grades and maintain an overall field GPA of 3.0. Please submit this form to Mark Ouchida, assistant director, Undergraduate Degree Programs.
